In my opinion Microsoft is a monopolist, because in the beginning it was the "command line" and there were many Disk Operating Systems (DOS) which made our computer go as far as MS-DOS. I remember when I DR-DOS, IBM-DOS and others were very good, rich, fast. MS-DOS was not bad, but it was not the best. When Windows came out, the use of the PC became more and more easy, and this adventure finished with the issue of Windows 95: the Graphic interface but also an Operating System. Somebody learnt to use a PC with Windows 95 installed, but other refused to learn Windows, because there were nothing to learn, except the use of the "mouse".
Now the Graphical interface seems to be the standard method to use a computer at home, but the use of Servers needs an operating system more transparent, which allows an administrator to set up the whole system, to repair damages. An OS more stable and safe like LInux and other Unix systems.
Now Linux has a GUI even nicer than Window's, the X system, and has been ready to be used by millions of users (who are not "wizards") for several years.
But never happened.
